A Message from the Anchorage Police Department and Victims for Justice

Dear Family:

The loss of a loved one is a traumatic experience for family, friends, and community. With the needs of your family in mind, we have worked together to write this booklet. We hope it will help you by answering some of the questions you have during the investigation, and identifying other help that is available to you during this most difficult time.

Please remember that you are not alone in your loss. It is the mission of APD to bring those responsible to justice, for the family and for the protection and safety of our communities. It's the mission of Victims for Justice to support you and your family in every way we can during the investigation and trial.

APD will attempt to ease the pain of your loss by conducting a thorough and professional investigation to identify, apprehend, and bring the persons responsible for this crime to justice.

During the course of our investigation there are many things that will occur that you may not understand. This booklet will identify the phases of the investigation so you will have a clear understanding of the process.

Included are contact information for APD, Victims for Justice, and other sources of help, and what to expect each step of the way during the investigation and trial.

If you have any questions, concerns or information regarding the death of your loved one, please free to contact the detectives assigned to your case. Their names are inside the front cover of this booklet. Or call Police Headquarters at (907) 786-8900.

If you would like spiritual support or counseling, our Police Chaplain can help; contact information is on page 4.

If you would like to have an advocate who can help you throughout this time, you should call Victims for Justice at (907) 278-0977. Their advocates are very knowledgeable about helping families, and their services are free.

The Initial Detectives assigned to your case are identified on the inside front cover. If there is anything that you need to know that is not included in this resource guide, do not hesitate to ask. We are here to assist you.

:: Things the Family Can Do Immediately ::

We know that this is a time of great sadness and stress for you, but there are a few simple things you can do to help:

:: Read this Homicide Guide for important information.

:: Get a spiral notebook to keep all important in formation in one place (preferably by your phone) for names, phone numbers, and for questions that need to be asked and answered.

:: Choose a family member or friend who will be the main contact for the family with the authorities, the funeral home, and the media. Provide that person's name, address, and contact information to the Case Detectives, Medical Examiner's office, funeral home, and the media (if you choose to do so).

:: Contact your own clergy or the Police Chaplain's Office, if that would be helpful to you.

:: Begin to notify family and friends and to consider funeral arrangements. Choose a funeral home but do not actually schedule services until the victim's body has been released by the Medical Examiner.

:: Locate a recent photograph of the victim that you can provide to the police, and another for the funeral home who will use it for an obituary. Pictures provided for an obituary can be returned to the family.

:: If you need help with funeral costs, contact Victims For Justice.

:: Anchorage Police Department Chaplaincy Program ::

Dear Family,

In times of crisis, an experienced support team makes all the difference. Police Chaplains may be available during your difficult time. The Chaplains will assist you in making contact with friends or family and wait with you until they arrive. Chaplains focus on helping you connect to area resources, community groups, and can contact your spiritual support person.

Chaplains are volunteers available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

They will listen, provide information, and assist individuals and families from all walks of life. Chaplains offer judgment-free support with open hearts and minds. You can reach the APD Chaplains by calling Dispatch at (907) 786-8500.

The Alaska Police and Fire Chaplains serve as a resource for the Anchorage Police Department and also the community. Chaplains are experienced, professional, and come from a variety of backgrounds.

Their mission is to provide support, in the ways that will be most beneficial to those in need. In order to best serve, APD Chaplains receive in depth specialized training.

:: Victims for Justice Advocacy Program ::

Mission: To serve victims of violent crime and the surviving family members of victims of homicide.

Victims For Justice (VFJ) is a community-based crime victim service organization that exists to offer services to those whose lives have been impacted by violent crime. VFJ specializes in serving and advocating for victims of all violent crime. We help victims cope with trauma and grief, and ensure their rights are respected within the judicial system.

Our services, which are free of charge, include:

:: Crisis Intervention at the time of the crime to assure that clients are safe, and to help them cope with the immediate impact of trauma and grief;

:: Coordination with police and prosecutors to ensure that clients are informed of developments in their case;

:: Court accompaniment and information about the criminal justice process during all hearings and trial proceedings;

:: Assistance with completion of Violent Crimes Compensation applications and victim impact statements;

:: Specialized grief support and individual or group counseling;

:: Information and referral about other service providers and professional organizations;

:: Private remembrance ceremonies for family and friends.

:: Victims for Justice - 907-278-0977

:: The Homicide Scene ::

The crime scene may seem chaotic, with many people doing many different things. Uniformed officers may be blocking streets, directing traffic, keeping bystanders and the media back, and deterring any further criminal activity. The Major Crime Scene Team Officers will be in control of processing the scene, searching for evidence and gathering pertinent information. They will be photographing, measuring, and collecting evidence. Other detectives will be conducting the canvass. Here is some information that may make it easier to understand what is happening at the crime scene.

:: Why won't detectives let family members near the victim's body?

Crime scene preservation and evidence collection is crucial to solving homicide cases. Although we understand your grief and the need for the family members to see or hold their loved one, investigators cannot risk the scene being contaminated or evidence destroyed by permitting unauthorized persons or family members in the restricted area. You may see flashing emergency lights and the responding uniformed officers blocking off streets and putting up yellow crime scene tape to rope off the area in an effort to preserve the crime scene. No one will be permitted inside the yellow tape except for paramedics, police, and investigators from the Medical Examiner's Office.

If a homicide occurs inside a home or building, all of the occupants will be removed and the area will be secured. A uniformed officer will be posted at the entrance and exits near the scene, and only authorized persons may enter. In a very few cases detectives may permit a family member to remove needed personal items from the scene before the scene is completely cleared.

:: Why does it take so long to remove the victim from the scene?

If paramedics have been called, they need time to provide emergency medical care and prepare to transport a surviving victim to the hospital. In cases where the victim cannot be revived and is deceased, responding Paramedics will make the pronouncement. Unlike television where you might see a white sheet covering the body, Homicide Detectives prefer not to have the body covered because in doing do, valuable evidence might be destroyed or altered. When a victim has been pronounced dead, the body will remain as is, because there are a series of investigative steps that must be taken before the victim can be removed from the scene.

APD will make every effort to preserve the dignity of the victim at the crime scene. The Major Crime Scene Unit will be in charge, and under their direction the Mobile Crime Unit Detectives will take the necessary photographs, collect evidence, and record measurements of the crime scene.

Forensic Investigators from the Medical Examiner's Office are the only ones who will have responsibility for the victim's remains. Nothing is removed from the body by Homicide Detectives. Only the Forensic Investigators can remove items from the victim, and these items are placed in evidence bags, recorded and retained by the Forensic Investigators, unless it is specifically authorized to be given to the Homicide Detectives. The Initial Homicide Detectives will witness the Forensic Investigator's work. Additional photographs may be taken. Bags will be placed over the victim's hands to preserve evidence, and the victim will be placed on a plastic surface to ensure that any evidence on the body will be maintained. before transport, the victim will be placed in a body bag. the medical examiner's cloth will be placed over the body bag to provide an additional sense of dignity for the victim as the body is placed on a stretcher and then transported to the Medical Examiner's Office.

Although Major Crime Scene Team officers work to have the body of the victim removed from the scene as quickly as possible, complex scenes with multiple victims, inclement weather, or unruly crowds can delay the departure time.

:: When will the crime scene be clear to enter?

In all cases, the family members may enter the crime scene once the evidence is collected and the scene is released by the Initial Homicide Detectives. The Initial Homicide Detectives will notify the family and/or property owner when the scene is released, and the crime scene tape will be removed. However, it's not unusual for detectives from Homicide and the Major Crime Investigation Team to return to the crime scene after the initial processing of the scene.

If the scene of the homicide is inside a residence, the Major Crime Scene Team officers will secure the residence and turn the key over to the next of kin.

In the case of an outside scene, the fire department may be asked to assist with restoring the area. In cases where the scene is inside, there are numerous private companies that specialize in assisting families with restoring the home or business. Victims for Justice can help you locate these services.

:: The Hospital Emergency Room ::

:: What happens when the victim is critically injured at the scene?

When a victim is critically injured at a scene, responding officers will call the Paramedics, who will stabilize the victim as much as possible and then transport the victim to the nearest hospital. When Paramedics are working on a victim at the scene, family members will not be permitted to intervene during life-saving efforts. Police and Paramedics may need to obtain information regarding the victim from family members. You may be asked to provide this information.

:: What happens at the hospital?

Upon arrival at the hospital, family members will be assisted by the Hospital Social Services. Often, family members may not be given access to the victim. The Hospital Personnel will assist the family by checking on the status of the victim and escorting family members to visit the victim, when authorized.

This is a very emotional and stressful time for families; we urge you to be patient as the medical personnel work to stabilize the victim. To do otherwise jeopardizes your loved one and other patients. Family members who are disruptive at the hospital will be escorted from the premises by hospital security or police.

Hospital Personnel will arrange for family members to speak with attending physicians and/or relay important information to the family.

Homicide Detectives will come to the hospital to interview the victim, if possible; to collect evidence; and to interview family members. Homicide Detectives also investigate aggravated assault cases where the victim is critically injured.

All efforts to obtain information on the victim's contacts and whereabouts in the 24 hours prior to the incident will be beneficial to the investigation.

The Police Chaplain is also available to help family members through this time of crisis. In some cases, the State Violent Crimes Compensation Board may be able to help cover the medical costs of a victim of a violent crime. Victims for Justice can assist you with this process.

:: The Victim's Property ::

:: What happens to the victim's property taken at the hospital or from the scene?

Any property removed from the victim of an aggravated assault or homicide will be turned over to the Homicide Detectives or Major Crime Scene Unit Investigators. Please understand that some property will be returned soon, while other property will be retained as evidence. Property that is kept as evidence will not be returned until after the conclusion of the criminal case, usually the trial.

The Initial Detectives on the case are responsible for both authorizing and facilitating the release of property. If your loved one was the victim of a crime, the Initial Detectives must get the approval of the State of Alaska District Attorney's Office before any property can be released.

Once the District Attorney has authorized release of the property, the Initial Detectives will complete a Property Release Form, have it approved by the homicide sergeant and they will then provide a copy to the Property Room personnel. The Initial Detectives will notify you that the property is available to be picked up. You must make an appointment to pick up property by calling 786-8660, and you must bring your identification. The Property Room is at Police Headquarters, 4501 Elmore Road, Anchorage. Hours are Monday-Thursday, 8 a.m.- 5 p.m.

:: What happens to the victim's vehicle, if it was involved in the crime?

When a vehicle is involved in a crime, the vehicle will be towed from the scene to a storage facility to be processed for evidence by the Major Crime Scene Unit Investigator and/or Homicide Unit Detectives.

In the majority of the cases the vehicle will be kept for evidence until the case is resolved in court. In some cases, however, the vehicle can be released to the owner or next of kin if the homicide did not happen in the vehicle. You should contact the Case Detective to see if and when the vehicle can be released.

In some cases, the State Violent Crimes Compensation Board may be able to help with the cost of transportation while the vehicle is kept for evidence. Victims for Justice can help you find out about this.

If a vehicle is released but it has no current registration or inspection it must be towed from the Tow Yard at the expense of the owner or next of kin. Leased or rental vehicles will be returned to the company.

:: What Happens to the Body? ::

:: When is the victim' s body taken to the Medical Examiner's Office?

If the victim died at the scene, the Medical Examiner's Office will remove the body when the Major Crime Scene Team officers have completed their investigation of the scene.

When the victim has died in the hospital, hospital personnel or APD Officers will contact the Forensic Investigators who will transport the body to the Medical Examiner's Office.

:: Who notifies the family of a victim of homicide?

The family or friends of a victim are often notified immediately by neighbors or bystanders who know the victim or their family.

If the family has not responded to the scene, it's the responsibility of the APD to notify the next of kin of the death.

The notification usually follows this order: husband or wife of the victim, adult children 18 years or older, parents, brothers or sisters, aunts, uncles, or other family members.

Unfortunately, it sometimes happens that before APD is able to locate the family members, some may learn of their loved-one's death through news accounts.

:: When should the family go to the Medical Examiner's Office?

If the family suspects a loved one has been the victim of a homicide, or has died in some other manner, they should contact the Medical Examiner's Office by telephone at (907) 334-2356.

A family member may be asked to identify the deceased victim. In most instances, they will be able to make the identification by viewing a photograph of the victim.

There is no need for family members to go to the Medical Examiner's Office. However, the family may need to provide the Medical Examiner with information about the victim, including any funeral arrangements.

The Medical Examiner's Office is located at 5455 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr Avenue, Anchorage, AK 99507. Although the office hours are Monday through Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., the Medical Examiner's office is operational 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

:: Why is an autopsy necessary?

State law requires that an autopsy be performed on all victims of homicide, suspicious or unexpected deaths.

:: When is the body taken to the funeral home?

After the Medical Examiner's examination, the victim's body will be released to the funeral home selected by the family. The funeral home will come to get the body.

In some cases the costs of the funeral home and burial, including transportation to another town or state, may be covered by the Violent Crimes Compensation Board. Victims for Justice can help you find out about this and complete the necessary paperwork.

In cases where no immediate family is available or no one has claimed the body, the Medical Examiner's Office will release the body to a funeral home which is on call at the time. If no next of kin is found, the funeral home will make all funeral arrangements.

:: The Homicide Investigation ::

:: Who are the Case Detectives assigned to my case?

Uniformed officers at the scene will request that a Homicide Unit Supervisor and Detectives conduct the investigation and be the primary contact with the victim's family. Homicide supervisors and other detectives from the Homicide Unit will assist in all aspects of the investigation. Your Case Detectives are listed inside the front cover of this booklet. Supervisors can be reached at (907)786-8582. Except for the times when they are called out, the Homicide Unit Detectives work normal business hours and are available Monday through Friday from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. The Anchorage Police Department is committed to providing professional service to you and your family during this most difficult time.

Case Detectives are instructed to keep in touch with the victim's family as much as possible and to always return telephone calls at their earliest convenience.

There are a variety of reasons why you may not be able to immediately reach the Initial Detective assigned to your case by telephone:

— Detectives are required to attend court and lengthy homicide trials make it difficult to be in the office to receive or return calls.

— Detectives may be out of the office following up on investigative leads, locating and interviewing witnesses, reviewing evidence, or searching for the suspect who committed the crime.

— Detectives may be on the scene of another homicide or assigned to follow up investigative leads out of state.

In order to maximize the Case Detectives' time in conducting the investigation, it is suggested that one family member be designated as the contact person.

This will assist the Case Detectives in making timely notifications to your family about the status of the case. The designated contact person should also be the individual who contacts the Case Detectives with any questions or concerns about the case in order to avoid duplication.

If the Case Detectives are unavailable, leave a message with the Homicide Unit Sergeant or another detective in the office. Often your question can be answered by another homicide detective in the office who may also be familiar with the case. A Victims' Advocate from Victims for Justice may also be able to help you stay informed about the status of the investigation.

In general, information about the case will not be released to individuals not identified as the victim's next of kin, the designated family contact person, or your designated Victims' Advocate.

:: What is a canvass?

The canvass is when detectives and/or uniformed officers go door-to-door to residences and businesses to see if anyone witnessed the crime or has any information that could lead to the identity of the perpetrator. Detectives look for video cameras in the area that may have captured the crime. Detectives talk to bystanders on the street and pass out business cards so people can call the Homicide office with additional information. Detectives record the license plate numbers and descriptions of all vehicles in the immediate area to aid in the investigation. The canvass is conducted at the scene and detectives will re-canvass the area the next day or at different times in order to reach witnesses who were not available during the initial canvass. The canvass is a very crucial part of the homicide investigation.

:: How do homicide detectives obtain information and solicit cooperation?

Detectives will interview all available witnesses in order to determine how the homicide occurred and to identify suspects.

In the absence of physical evidence which identifies the suspect, the Homicide Unit Detectives must rely on the cooperation of witnesses to the crime and family for information on the case.

Witnesses are sometimes reluctant to cooperate with the investigation; however, it does not mean that the uncooperative witness was a participant in the crime. Some witnesses are not cooperative because they are afraid, fear retaliation, or just do not want to get involved. These are all challenges for investigators. They do everything they can to gain the confidence and cooperation of all witnesses. Keep in mind that police cannot arrest someone for not cooperating.

Detectives will also interview family members and friends of the victim to learn more details about the victim's life and any recent events which may be related to the homicide. The questions that are asked may be sensitive, and may feel intrusive. You may be asked to provide information on your loved one's friends, jobs, hobbies, habits, hangouts, relationships, possessions, and in some cases their use of illegal drugs or their involvement in illegal activity. Please be assured that the detectives are not making moral judgments about your loved one's behavior or lifestyle. This information could be very important to the investigation and it is information that only you or your loved one's closest associates can provide.

Again, one family member should be designated as a point of contact so that the Initial Detectives can keep the family apprised on the status of the investigation.

When the identity of the suspect is not known, the Homicide Unit Detectives will review the case with the Homicide Supervisor in order to determine what additional follow-up is needed.

A Public Information Officer (PIO) may do a media release in order to solicit help from the community. The release provides general details of the homicide and the telephone number for the community to call with information and anonymous tips. The victim's name will not be released until next of kin has been notified. It's helpful for the family to provide detectives with a recent photograph which can be used for the media release.

It may also be helpful for a family member to speak with the media encouraging people to come forward with information to assist in solving the crime.

The Homicide Unit will complete the details and follow up on all investigative leads and tips until a suspect has been identified and arrested. The key to solving the case is the cooperation of the family members, witnesses, and the community.

:: Why can't I be told all the facts in the investigation?

The Case Detectives can only provide you with a summary of the circumstances involving your loved one's case.

Depending on the circumstances of the case, the Case Detectives may not be able to provide information concerning aspects of the investigation. This information may be withheld for a variety of reasons, including the preservation of the integrity of the investigation. There is a chance that if sensitive information gets into the wrong hands, it will jeopardize our ability to apprehend or obtain an arrest warrant for the suspect.

We understand your need to learn more about the circumstances surrounding the death of your loved one, but the integrity of the investigation cannot be compromised. As mentioned above, some aspects of the investigation must be kept confidential and therefore you will not be able to review or request copies of investigative reports. However, you may request to meet with the Case Detectives to discuss the elements of the case and possibly review video or photographs at the Homicide office.

Distraught family members may want to take matters into their own hands. We strongly recommend that you discourage retaliation of any kind. Please focus your energy on assisting detectives with the investigation.

Withholding information will only delay the investigation and leave the perpetrator on the streets to possibly cause more harm.

:: The Arrest and Prosecution ::

:: When can homicide detectives make an arrest?

The Homicide Unit wants to make an arrest on every homicide case and successfully prosecute the suspect in court. While this goal will not bring back your loved one, it will ensure that the suspect is taken off the street and held accountable for his/her actions. In order to be successful, the Case Detectives must build a solid case against the suspect because prosecutors only have one chance to present the case in criminal court. If a suspect is found not guilty, they cannot be retried again for the same crime.

Please understand that every case is different. Some cases are closed with an arrest made within hours of the incident, while other cases may take days, months, and sometimes years. There is no statute of limitations (time limit) on homicide and charges can be filed at any time once a suspect has been identified. However, before an arrest is made, the Case Detectives must develop probable cause that the suspect committed the crime.

We understand your frustration when an arrest has not been made even though you forwarded a name of a suspect to the Case Detectives. The detectives can only make an arrest if the physical evidence and/or witness statements clearly show that the suspect committed the crime. Speculation is not enough to obtain an arrest warrant.

Probable cause is established through a combination of witness statements, physical evidence, and confessions. Probable cause is not based on rumor or speculation from anonymous persons who are trying to be helpful in the case.

Once probable cause has been established, detectives must review the facts and circumstances of the case with the District Attorney's Office before an arrest is authorized.

With the approval of the District Attorney, detectives will prepare a criminal complaint and apply for an arrest warrant for the suspect. The arrest warrant must then be signed by a magistrate or judge before an arrest can be made.

:: What happens once the arrest warrant is obtained?

Detectives will attempt to serve the arrest warrant by searching for the suspect at his/her last known address. If the suspect is not located, detectives will circulate a wanted poster to all law enforcement agencies in the immediate area.

Additional resources will be used to locate the suspect including notifying the media as well as utilizing the Alaska State Troopers and United States Marshal's Fugitive Task Force to assist in locating a suspect who fled outside of the city or state limits. Once an arrest warrant is obtained the information will be placed into the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) so that it can be distributed to law enforcement across the United States.

:: What happens after the arrest?

After the suspect is arrested, he/she will be transported to the Anchorage Police Department Station for processing.

The suspect will then be transported to the Anchorage Jail, located at 1400 E. 4th Ave. Anchorage, Alaska 99501, until he/she can be arraigned by a magistrate on homicide charges. At the arraignment, the magistrate will advise the suspect of the charges and set bail.

In most homicide cases, the suspect is held in jail without bail and will remain in jail throughout the criminal proceedings.

A Homicide Detective will notify the family of the arrest through their point of contact and a release will be sent to the media advising them of the arrest.

Alaska law permits victims and their family to attend all open court hearings in their case. A representative from the District Attorney's Office will notify you of all hearings. Please make sure that they have good contact information for you on file. (907) 269-6300.

Alaska law permits victims and their family to be accompanied at all open court hearings by a Victims' Advocate. The Advocate can help explain the court procedures, attend if the family cannot, and answer other questions for the family.

Victim Information and Notification Everyday (VINE)

Since 1998, the Alaska Department of Corrections has offered a toll-free automated inmate information and notification service. Victim Information and Notification Everyday (VINE) service is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Victims and concerned citizens can call the toll-free number (800) 247-9763 or visit www.vinelink.com and receive an inmate's current location and tentative release date. Victims and concerned citizens may also register to receive an automated notification when an inmate is released, transferred to a halfway house, escapes, is placed on electronic monitoring, transferred to another jurisdiction, or dies while in custody.
